Three Proposed Routes Are Discussed by Farmers of Box Elder County.

Special to The Tribune.

Special to The Tribune.

BRIGHAM CITY, March II.—Much anxiety is in evidence here over the proposed extension of the Ogden Rapid Transit company's line into Cache county. The fact that the company has three routes at its disposal is keeping the people along all three routes guessing as to which community is to be favored. It is generally believed here that the route through Ogden canyon to Eden and thence north over the big divide into Cache valley is considered by the company more from a scenic standpoint than from a business-getting point of view.

Farmers north of Brigham are offering right-of-way free for long distances to procure the road, and they have sound arguments for believing that the Bear River valley route is the most feasible one of the three, for a rich, fertile country would be traversed the entire distance, with abundance of room for expansion. Those who are familiar with southern Cache valley country realize that there is little room for expansion for miles and miles in the extreme southern portion. There are many rich farms in that section, but the general lay of the country is mountainous until Faradise is reached.

By way of this city and Box Elder canyon the line would be a rich.

dise is reached.

By way of this city and Box Elder canyon the line would touch the town of Mantua, which is surounded by a rich valley, the entire valley being a splendid location for a summer resort. From there the line would traverse in a northeasterly direction until Cache valley is reached. Here the line would tap southwestern Cache valley entering Wellsville, and from there would go through a well developed farming section, tapping also the most prominent towns that would be on the proposed line through southern Cache.
